

We love the luxurious fusion of Matt Black fixtures, hexagon feature tiles and timber-inspired floor tiles.

EXPERT TIP
The substitution of glass instead of walls is a clever way to let in light and take advantage of stunning views.

WELLNESS AND LUXURY

"Reflecting the health and wellness lifestyle of the owners, this modern ensuite has been renovated to match the contemporary style, luxury and functionality of this Brisbane penthouse apartment. With space at a premium, an enclosure that combines both bathing and wellness was installed. The large walk-in glass steam room/shower replaced what was previously a built-in bath tub. Part of the external bathroom wall was removed and replaced with glass to improve light in the space, plus allow for a view of the cityscape. The ceiling inside the enclosed space needed to be at a certain angle and tiled to allow for condensation to run off into the drain without dripping on the user. The tile selection was paramount, as was the ratio required between the amounts of glass used and insulated walls so that the steam room maintained the correct temperature and condensation levels. A new half wall was constructed, which allowed for plumbing and other services to be relocated within the room. The wall beneath the window was made wide to house the concealed toilet system and suspend the black toilet pan. This "services" wall then continues behind the vanity basins and seamlessly into the shower. The addition of the mirror-faced storage joinery, just above the wall and stepped in from the outside window, creates a recessed niche. Panels of charcoal glass line the niche, with highlights coming from the energy-efficient defused LED lights. The decor is contemporary and seamlessly incorporates the adjoining furnishings of the dressing room and master bedroom."
